

Effective Communication

“I’ve told them a thousand times, they just don’t listen”

The Challenge

The backbone to any relationship is effective communication. There’s more and more that needs to be communicated for best results, yet with all the advances in modern communication there seems to be more and more challenges. People take things for granted, they assume people know what they mean, they avoid real time conversation and substitute it for email and text, leaving recipients with the choice of how to interpret the message and often getting it wrong. Where working shifts exist and remote working is in place, communication is strained even further. We are losing the ability to hold a face to face conversation and performance and overall results are suffering as a consequence.

The Solution

Taking ownership and accountability for what and how you are communicating. Selecting the right media (which might be more than one option), joining your people in their world and speaking their language, engaging with your audience and checking their understanding are key success factors for improving your effective communication and getting the results you are aiming for.

This half day pragmatic workshop enables you to do the following :

- Actively listen and engage with different people
- Set S.M.A.R.T objectives for maximum results
- Communicate with a wider audience
- Get results from how you communicate
- Take ownership of communication
- Gain people’s understanding
- Worry less about what you’ve said
